Rumanian Ban On Migration To Israel Is Eased For Reunion Of Families There

Without announcement, Rumania apparently has eased her ban on migration to Israel to let some Jews rejoin their families. Most of Rumania's 250,000 Jews want to go to Israel, according to information available in Israel. Eighty per cent of the 400,000 Jews who survived the Nazi occupation applied for emigration to Israel in 1948 after the new state was set up.

About 150,000 reached Israel by 1952, when Bucharest abruptly halted the exodus, leaving husbands separated from wives and parents from children, says the New York Times. Thereafter not a single Rumanian Jew reached Israel until May, 1955, when a plane from Vienna brought four elderly women who joined their children, and a man who was reunited with his wife and son. During the next three years a few Rumanian Jews came occasionally.

The recent reversal of policy was illustrated by the case of a 32-year-old radio technician from Ploesti. When he applied for an exit permit, officials asked him what relatives he had in Rumania. He said he had parents, a grandmother and other kin. He was advised to bring the passports of all, since the Government wished to avoid new problems of divided families. Exit permits were issued to the entire group.

A majority of the 15,000 to 17,000 immigrants from East Europe who are expected during the next six months will come from Rumania, it is thought in Israel. Most of the 2,400 who came during the last six months arrived from that country.

[illegible] downs of the anti-[illegible] to a tug of [illegible] Stalinists and liberals. Dov Cohen, head of the Rumanian Jewish community in Israel, explains it like this:

Jewish survivors filled a vital need in post-war Rumania. Ninety per cent of the population had been wartime supporters of the Fascist Green Shirts, and the Communists had only about 1,000 members when they took over, says the New York Times. Virtually the only intellectuals who were reliably anti-Fascist were Jews, and they were given managerial posts in all spheres of activity.

Jewish Communist leaders such as Josef Kishinevsky therefore persistently tried to block the exodus of Jews. However, the liberals prevailed until 1952, when the climate in the Communist world changed.

In Moscow there were trumped-up charges that Jewish physicians had plotted the medical murder of Soviet leaders. In Prague, Israel was maligned during a show trial of Rudolf Slansky and other Jewish Communists. In Rumania, 200 Zionists were jailed and Jewish emigration was halted.

As the Stalinists lost influence, the pattern in Rumania changed and the Zionist prisoners were released. A trickle of emigration was resumed.

The dramatic shift this year was due to a variety of factors. The Rumanians were moved by pressure of international humanitarian organizations and chancelleries to permit the reunion of families broken by the abrupt ban on immigration in 1952. In connection with the purge of Vyacheslav M. Molotov and his associates in Moscow, M. Kishinevsky was ousted from the Rumanian Politburo, and Stalinist influence was further curbed.

After the trouble in Hungary the Rumanian authorities set about finding managerial posts for the rising generation of Rumanian intellectuals. Consequently, Jewish officials were systematically dismissed, and the authorities were [illegible] with the problem of [illegible]

[illegible] circumstances, Mr. Cohen explains, the emigration policy was liberalized, according to the New York Times. However, the conflict between the Stalinists and the liberals is still going on and the decision may be reversed at any time, he cautioned.

Jews in Hungary may soon be permitted to emigrate to Israel.

A.J.C. Condemns "Panic" Action Against Bombings

The American Jewish Congress denounced attempts to curb bigotry and bombings by group libel legislation, postal censorship, or Congressional investigations. Such "panic" action would not only be ineffective but would also constitute a threat to civil liberties, the agency declared, in a resolution at the two-day meeting in the Warwick Hotel in Philadelphia, Pa. Some 250 leaders of the national organization attended.

The resolution condemned "panic proposals" to combat vandalism and hate literature as dangerous, says the New York Times, because they would engender fear and hysteria, treat the symptoms rather than the causes of recent violence and defamation, and threaten basic American freedoms.

The resolution was submitted by Shad Polier, of New York, chairman of the Congress' Commission on Law and Social Action. The meeting marked the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the Congress in Philadelphia. The resolution charged "Governors, Senators, and other public officials who have expressed defiance of the Constitution" are responsible for the disrespect for law in the South since the Supreme Court outlawed school segregation in 1954.

In calling for action to safeguard civil liberties, the Congress recommended: A Federal law to make the transportation of explosives across state lines with the intent to use them against communal buildings, business places, or dwellings a Federal offense. Enforcement by the Department of Justice of present statutes making it a Federal offense to conspire to [illegible]

An investigation by the Federal Commission on Civil Rights and the Department of Justice of the denial of voting rights in the South. Acceptance of "full responsibility" by the executive and legislative branches of the Government "to implement the mandate of equality of education laid down by the Supreme Court."

Noted Cantor Was Best Known For Singing Yiddish Folk Songs

Moishe Oysher, cantor, composer and actor, who died in the New Rochelle N. Y., Hospital of a coronary ailment from which he had suffered for sixteen years, was one of the best known Yiddish-American personalities.

He lived at 59 Ernest Drive, Scarsdale, N. Y., and was fifty-one years of age. He was best known in the Jewish community for his composition and singing of Yiddish folk songs, says the New York Herald Tribune. He also recorded liturgical music, made numerous concert tours, had his own radio show and appeared in six motion pictures, two of them in English.

However, he regarded show business as an avocation. There had been cantors in his family for six generations and he considered himself first a cantor and second a performer.

He was not assigned to one particular synagogue, but appeared frequently at different synagogues as a guest cantor. His most recent record album, "The Moishe Oysher Hanukkah Party," contained both liturgical and folk music.

His best-known songs were "Dos Kishinever [illegible]" (Ditty of Kishinev); "Grosse Blatter" (Green Leaves); "Drei Dreidels" (Spin, Hanukkah Top) and "Unter Mein Feimer" (In the Shade). He frequently played the part of a cantor in his films, the last time was "Singing in the Dark," an English-language movie released in 1956, for which he composed the [illegible] music.

[illegible] and went on the Yiddish stage three years later. He was already well known as a performer when he was certified as a cantor at the age of thirty years.

During his thirty-four-year career he recorded scores of songs and appeared on concert stages all over the world. He was fluent in English, Hebrew, Yiddish, Spanish, Russian and Rumanian and sang in languages other than Yiddish and Hebrew, says the New York Herald Tribune. From 1952 to 1956 he was the star of the "American Jewish Caravan," a radio show on WMGM.

Despite his illness, which forced him to enter the hospital Mr. Oysher recently sang at the Pines Hotel in South Fallsburg. He had made frequent appearances there for the last four years.

With his 11-year-old daughter Roxanna as narrator, Mr. Oysher recently completed a long-playing record, "The Moishe Oysher Hanukkah Party," in anticipation of the Hanukkah festival. His other holiday recordings included "Moishe Oysher Seder" and "The Kol Nidre Night." Mr. Oysher had appeared for eighteen years in motion pictures, many of which dealt with folk subjects.

Mr. Oysher made his debut as an actor in 1925 with a Jewish troupe in Winnipeg, Man., says the New York Times. Two years later he toured in South America, returning to New York in 1934. Along with his acting career Mr. Oysher won wide repute during his twenty-one years as a cantor. His prodigious vocal range prompted friends to identify him uncertainly but admiringly as "a tenor or a baritone — or both."

Mr. Oysher was recalled often to repeat his early appearance at the First Rumanian American Congregation on Rivington Street in New York. He served as cantor also at the Stone Avenue Talmud Torah in Brooklyn and the Minford Place Synagogue in the Bronx.

Born in the Bessarabian town of Lipkon, Mr. Oysher studied under European rabbis and other Hebraic scholars. He went to Canada at the age of thirteen years and a year later began a twelve-year career as a light-opera singer on the Jewish stage in the United States and Argentina.

Mr. Oysher was a member of the Hebrew Actors Union, the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, the American Guild of Variety Artists, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and the Farband-Labor Zionist Order.

Surviving, besides his daughter, are his widow, Mrs. Theodora Metzger Oysher; his mother, Mrs. Lilly Reimer Oysher, and a sister, Mrs. Freidele Sternberg.

Israel Will Review Whole Question Of "Who Is A Jew", Says Ben-Gurion

Israel's former Minister of Religion charged in Atlantic City, N.J., recently that Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's cabinet was "isolating" the Israeli Government from Jewish communities over the world by attempts to introduce secular practices in that country.

Moshe Shapiro, the former Minister, declared that Mr. Ben-Gurion "had made a deplorable error" in his effort "to give a secular definition of what constitutes a member of the Jewish people." Mr. Shapiro addressed 800 delegates attending the dinner session of the annual convention of the Religious Zionists of America.

The issue, centering on the question of who is a Jew, evoked sharp controversy in Israel last June and resulted in a cabinet crisis, says the New York Times. In protest against the secular definition, Mr. Shapiro and Dr. Joseph Burg, then Minister of Posts, resigned. Both are Orthodox Jews.

All citizens of Israel carry identification cards, a measure continued by the Israeli Government after Britain relinquished its mandate over what was then Palestine. Last June, Israel's Minister of Interior, announced that anyone who identified himself as a Jew would be so listed on the identification cards. However, Orthodox Jewish leaders in and out of the Cabinet objected. They held that this would not fully establish Jewish identity in consonance with Jewish religious laws. The issue is still unresolved.

Mr. Shapiro contended that "by the secular intervention into an exclusively religious area, Mr. Ben-Gurion has caused serious [illegible] in the country and [illegible] at a time when it is most painfully in need of the unity and support of the Jewish community."

"The question of Jewishness," Mr. Shapiro continued, "has always been determined by our rabbinical authorities who had been guided by the precepts of our religious teachings." Mr. Shapiro added that Mr. Ben-Gurion and members of his coalition Government "wished to usurp this precious authority and to convert it into a civil and secular matter in utter disregard of religious teachings."

He said that the resignation of Dr. Burg and himself was "not a matter of caprice," says the New York Times. He said that "we cannot possibly consider returning to the Cabinet unless the question of Jewish identity is once again restored to the authorities to which it fully belongs, namely, to the chief rabbinate of Israel."

Since the convention of the Religious Zionists of America, Premier David Ben-Gurion has survived a parliamentary attempt to unseat him for having accused an Israeli Chief Rabbi of "maliciously misleading" the public.

The Premier then crossed swords a second time with the Orthodox leadership when he sought parliamentary approval for a new Minister for Religious Affairs against the wishes of the rabbinical leaders.

These were developments in the five-month dispute between the Socialist Government and the religious and Right-wing parties over the definition of "Jew" for purposes of registration in government identity cards. The National Religious party defected from the coalition on this issue, maintaining that the secular authorities had no business saying who is a Jew because this had been clearly defined in Jewish sources.

Anyone born to a Jewish mother, regardless of the father's religion, or a proselyte is recognized as a Jew under Talmudic law.

The no-confidence motion regarding the alleged insult to Chief Rabbi Itshak Nissim was defeated by 60 votes to 39. The statement was actually made by Premier Ben-Gurion's private secretary, Itshak Navon, says the New York Times.

Premier Ben-Gurion said in the Knesset (Parliament) that he had instructed his secretary to apprise Rabbi Nissim of an "inaccuracy" contained in an interview he had given to a London Jewish weekly. In the interview Rabbi Nissim said that the Premier had approved directives issued by the Minister of the Interior about the registration of persons claiming [illegible]

The Rabbi answered that he would not correct the statement unless the Premier would submit the appointment of a ministerial committee to study the question. Mr. Ben-Gurion's secretary then wrote that the Chief Rabbi was "maliciously misleading."

Premier Ben-Gurion's nominee for Minister of Religious Affairs is Rabbi Yaakov Moshe Toledano, Chief Rabbi of Tel Aviv. Critics of Premier Ben-Gurion called Rabbi Toledano's appointment "a political trick" designed to detach Sephardic (Oriental) Jews from the National Religious party before elections next year.

Meanwhile Premier Ben-Gurion announced that the registration of controversial cases had been deferred and that the Government would review the whole question of "who is a Jew." Forty-three Jewish leaders throughout the world were canvassed for their views.

THE BUSINESSMAN'S MORAL FAILURE

say instead that we have to feel the wonder and significance of life and its unique opportunity for achievement. Each of us has only one life on earth. When that life is used unwisely, the loss is irreparable for oneself and for one's fellows.

A businessman who understands these truths will develop an almost automatic pattern of behavior. Certain ancient rules apply with equal force to Jew and Christian, atheist and agnostic, to all men in all situations. These immutable laws are expressed in various ways. The Pentateuch reveals the Decalogue and the Golden Rule of Leviticus 19:18: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," which the Gospels restate in Matthew 7:12: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Similar commandments are promulgated in the literature of the other great traditions of East and West.

Yet these and other binding commandments are often violated in the American business community. A man fears he may be risking his business if he obeys them, forgetting, however, that if he violates them he risks the world.

Business leaders who generously advised me in the preparation of this article said, "The majority of the American business community are not evil men, and want to do right. Let us say we admit the indictment and accept our responsibility — what can we do?"

To begin with, a businessman can develop an awareness that every decision of his life involves moral considerations. He can help develop this sensitivity in employees and associates, through example, through discussing with them the moral implications of company actions, through constant reminders that he has values in life above profit or economic security.

There are some corporations which insist that their executives assume responsibility for civic and community improvement. But the businessman can go further. In his training school for management he can introduce students of ethics, as well as management experts and psychologists, to consider the responsibilities of the business executive. He can overcome his anti-intellectualism. He can try to gain knowledge that will clarify the problems of wise decision making.

Without "moralizing"

The businessman must realize that the inculcation of moral sensitivity starts in early childhood and continues throughout life. American society has achieved this kind of indoctrination in other fields. To take two familiar examples: virtually every American child is brought up with a concern for personal hygiene; virtually every female child is indoctrinated with the need to be as physically attractive as possible. Our culture is probably unique in the emphasis it places on these two patterns of education.

The businessman can, without "moralizing" (which would be deadening and self-defeating), transform his home into a school for moral responsibility. Avoiding precept, the businessman can make even his conversation at table serve the vital end of character education for himself, his wife, his children, and his guests. The stories he tells, the gestures he makes, the conversation he chooses and avoids, can all show that he has at least some notion of what life, America, and freedom are about. Without being in the slightest degree priggish, and eventually without self-consciousness, he may help his family and friends obtain insight into the ethical life.

The American businessman, then, should literally place ethics on the agenda — for himself at home and in the office, for his company and trade association:

His calendar should include regular meetings of management to discuss the moral dimensions in his specific business. One firm that instituted such meetings finds it continually gains valuable insights into new relationships with the many other organizations with which it does business.

He should seek expert advice on ethics. Existing resources in the field will gladly be made available to him.

He should put moral health on the same level as mental and physical health, indeed above them. This means he should read literature dealing with ethics; devote time to the study of ethics, alone and with colleagues and scholars; work for the establishment of research in ethics, as he has worked magnificently for the development of research in science and technology.

The beginning of wisdom

Whatever else may or may not be involved in the application of such principles, it will demand direction of effort — not merely doing what one happens to like at a given moment and following the easy path of self-indulgence. Wisdom begins with sacrifice of immediate pleasures for long-range purposes. There is a widespread view that belief in God and personal immortality leads to this discipline. The fact, however, is that the discipline itself is also indispensable to real belief in God and human immortality. That is why the role of the businessman in American ethics is no less crucial than that of the religious leader or scholar.

Today's crisis demands the businessman's leadership in the area of human behavior. The kind of criticism with which enlightened businessmen could confront philosophers and theologians could be a challenge. Then superficiality in religion would cease to be fashionable, and laymen would soon detect its shallowness. Morally sensitive and informed businessmen can compel American philosophy and religion to focus on the basic problems troubling mankind.

We Americans will then no longer warrant William James's description of us as worshippers of "the bitch-goddess, Success." Our best young minds would strive for genuine, rather than apparent, achievement. If we can overcome the tendency to measure intellectual productivity by quantity rather than quality, America might produce works and insights into the ethical realm comparable to the eternal creations that have emerged from other civilizations. With such creations, rallying the spiritual energies of all men, America and the Free World will not endure.

One modest step

Civilization needs men and women whose every act and decision will bear the stamp of responsibility. The world cannot long survive, at least in freedom, if decisions are made irresponsibly — that is, without disciplined consideration of individual and general consequences. At the present moment, this may seem almost impossible to achieve. Yet without many dedicated men and women exercising disciplined consideration of each of their actions, none of the great philosophic or religious traditions could have survived.

Modest steps to focus different types of experience on the complex issues of our day have been taken in various ways, one of which is the work of a group of scholars who drew together in 1939 in New York. The group includes physical scientists, social scientists, philosophers, and theologians of different faiths, who were stirred by the apparition of Nazism but recognized it as a symptom of a chronic disease of our time rather than the disease itself. They hoped they could clarify today's moral problems. Once a year, sometimes once in two years, these scholars have met. Some participants are frankly agnostic, some atheistic, others devout. For a long time their discussions were at cross-purposes. There were frequent outbursts when varied types of mind and experience confronted one another. Gradually, they arrived at an astoundingly simple conclusion: the problem of their concern may be summed up in a single word — "responsibility."

This conference of scholars is hopeful of establishing nothing less than a World Academy of Ethics and an Institute for Practical Ethics for Everyday Living, drawing on the wisdom not only of Christianity and Judaism but of Islam, Buddhism, Confucianism, and other traditions. The scholars need the help and participation of businessmen.

Does all of this sound as though the American businessman had to take on new burdens, and rush even more prematurely to his grave? On the contrary, one of man's primary duties to himself, his family, the community, and to God is preservation of his life on earth, so that he can realize his potentialities for good. The businessman who will take time to contemplate and to ponder the ethical dimension of life will discover new realms in which he can develop his talents, freeing himself from the bondage to private gain that menaces the maturing business executive. Clearly understanding the principles of a meaningful life, he will share them with his family, especially with his wife. He will accept philosophically the occasional defeats and frustrations of his business career. He will carry his burdens serenely and thus preserve his own life, as well as that of the community.

A potential Moses?

Before he decides that the moral discipline required to build a better society is too arduous for him and that he is too busy to master a new dialect of thought, before he flees his responsibility, he might do well to ponder the story of Moses in the third chapter of Exodus.

The father of Prophecy was heavy of tongue. He, too, preferred the ease of Midian and the pleasures of shepherd life to the burdens imposed by the leadership of men. He could not believe that the task presented to him could not be done by another. For a moment he doubted that it could ever be accomplished. But sometimes, because of unique combinations of circumstances surrounding him, an individual is indispensable for a specific role in history. Whether or not he wished it, Moses was one of the great spiritual leaders of mankind. He could neglect his duty, but he could not assign it to anyone else.

Cadillac

Even Newer from Behind the Wheel!

Odds are you've seen the new 1959 Cadillac by now—perhaps sweeping regally past you on the boulevard . . . perhaps making its majestic arrival at a fine club or hotel.

And if you have, then you know that this is the most brilliantly styled Cadillac ever created.

And odds are, too, that you've wondered if this 1959 "car of cars" could be as extraordinary in performance as it is in appearance.

Well, once you've found out for yourself, we think the truth will very likely amaze you. For this Cadillac is even newer from behind the wheel!

You will sense it, in fact, the moment you hear the whisper-quiet response of its great new engine.

And your sentiment will grow to conviction as you discover—one by one—the other wonders of Cadillac's new performance.

. . . responsiveness so immediate and so silken that it is difficult to believe.

. . . handling ease so remarkable that you follow the curves and corners with the slightest imaginable movement of hand and wheel.

. . . a quality of ride so smooth and level and quiet that even the byways travel like boulevards.

Indeed, the evidence will be overwhelming—a journey at its wheel is the world's most glorious interval between start and stop.

If this sounds almost too good to be true . . . well, the proof is no farther away than your nearest authorized Cadillac dealer.

He'll be delighted to make you his guest at any time—to explain the virtues of each of Cadillac's thirteen new Fleetwood-crafted models, including the fabulous new Eldorado Brougham. He'll be pleased to see you today!

To rise to his full stature, the American businessman — who at his best embodies many of the Prophetic virtues — must also shoulder a unique burden of responsibility. The fate of the world hangs on his decisions, for above all the world needs ethical leadership from those it respects as supremely practical.

The words spoken by Moses to his contemporaries more than three thousand years ago apply literally to us in this latter day: "See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil." If the American businessman can bring himself to choose life and good, he can save not only our own but future generations. Surely he will heed the ancient Prophet's plea: "Therefore, choose life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy seed."

(Dr. Louis Finkelstein is chancellor and Solomon Schechter Professor of Theology at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York City. His father was an Orthodox rabbi who moved to Brooklyn from Lithuania. He is a student of the civil and ritual law of the Talmud and was the pastor of a congregation in the Bronx before coming to the seminary. One of the seminary's interests is the Institute on Ethics, in which a number of Protestant and Roman Catholic leaders participate. These include: F. Ernest Johnson, study consultant of the Department of Church and Economic Life of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.; R. M. MacIver, Lieber Professor Emeritus of Political Philosophy and Sociology, Columbia University; and George N. Shuster, president, Hunter College of the City of New York. This article reflects numerous conversations Dr. Finkelstein has had with these men, as well as with a number of business leaders.)

ABC and HIGH STANDARDS GO TOGETHER

In qualifying for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, publishers are doing more than providing advertisers with the facts about the circulation of their publications.

They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations

A.J.C. CONDEMNS

"The crux of the problem," the resolution states, "is that lawlessness on high leads inevitably to lawlessness below. Any effort to meet the outbreak of anti-Semitic violence without attacking the underlying lawlessness that gives rise to it will necessarily be futile and self-defeating."

The Congress said it opposed enactment of laws that would make it a penal offense to defame racial or religious groups "because freedom is indivisible," says the New York Times. A group libel statute used to jail or silence hate mongers today, it warned, might be used tomorrow to silence minorities.

ISRAEL WILL REVIEW

Among them are sixteen Americans, says the New York Times, including Orthodox, Reform, and Conservative leaders and laymen such as Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter, Prof. D. A. Wolfson, of Harvard University; and Justice Simon Rifkin, of New York.

In qualifying for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, publishers are doing more than providing advertisers with the facts about the circulation of their publications.
They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

The Businessman's Moral Failure

BY DR. LOUIS FINKELSTEIN, CHANCELLOR OF THE JEWISH THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF AMERICA, IN NEW YORK CITY, AND ALSO SOLOMON SCHECHTER PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY THERE

Reprinted through the courtesy of the Editors of FORTUNE; Copyright 1958 TIME INC.

If American businessmen are right in the way most of them now live, then all the wise men of the ages, all the prophets and the saints were fools. If the saints were not fools, the businessmen must be.

Too many businessmen never stop to ponder what they are doing; they reject the need for self-discipline; they are satisfied to be clever, when they need to be wise. They worry about their place on the economic ladder, but are not concerned sufficiently with whether the civilization in which they work is likely to collapse. They can defeat a local competitor, but may well be defeated by the competitor of us all, which is moral decay.

Now the American executive is very often a man of some vision, motivated by a spirit that generates great energy. Underlying the efficiency of our business community there is the principle of teamwork, cooperation, a reasonable degree of pleasure in the success of co-workers, a comparatively broad welcome to talent, and freedom in human relationships. Granted, these are virtues of no mean order. But the American businessman is losing his insight into the moral sources of American economic strength.

Our country could not have reached its present heights without the blessing of natural resources; but the U.S. would have failed at the outset without a philosophy developed by men more concerned with the betterment of the human spirit than the comforts of the body. These men were inspired by the writings of immortal philosophers and religious thinkers. The modern business leader is more often than not bewildered at the suggestion that the future of the Republic is in some way related to the ideals and ideas of John Locke, not to mention Spinoza, the medieval Scholastics, the Rabbinic sages, and the ancient Greek philosophers.

Ask the U.S. businessman why he is successful today, and he may explain to you the advantages of capitalism, the profit motive, and the "American system." He may, with due modesty, point out the superiority of his own products and marketing. But he will largely ignore the philosophic foundations of the American system. He tends to ignore the great ethical laws as they apply immediately to his work. The truth is that he is preoccupied chiefly with gain, coasting on the spiritual momentum of the past, divorced from our sources of inspiration. He is the leading citizen of a largely hedonistic nation propelled by meaningless drives toward materialistic and frequently meaningless goals.

Clearly no institution will survive if it is dedicated only to self-preservation. A business has a goal beyond simple success. It is not a biological organism whose survival is a virtue in itself. Rather, it is a man-created institution, an integral part of our culture, and as such must make a contribution of service to society (as well as a profit for itself) if it hopes to survive. It cannot do this out of a focus on self-gain or pride.

Why do I single out the American businessman for indictment, when he is probably no more materialistic than any of the rest of us? I do so because of the responsibility he bears, because his role in American society is so great. Ours is an industrial society, and the customs and morals and attitudes of businessmen pervade our whole life. Virtually all of us in America have adopted in some degree the pragmatic ethical standards of our business society, and to that degree we have abandoned our ethical and religious traditions.

The American tragedy

Our American tragedy is that we fail to see the signs of our decay. But the signs are apparent in the vulgar ostentation all around us, in the sexual laxity revealed by the Kinsey studies, in the demoralization of American captives in the Korean war, in the widespread defiance of law. The signs are apparent in our general toleration of wrongdoing, which is itself an evil and corrupting force.

Curiously, this breakdown of moral discipline has occurred when institutionalized religion is flourishing as never before. But even religion in America now tends to be superficial. For many laymen it consists of writing an occasional check and sporadic attendance at church or synagogue, rather than in personal commitment. There is a dearth of saints, and many ministers themselves are unduly concerned with security in this world. While the percentage of truly dedicated pastors may be no smaller than in previous generations, today they suffer a special disability — a failure to communicate with the members of their flocks.

Human history is studded with the ruins of empires that came to a similar pass. Nations have been wrecked because they lacked an overriding moral goal to which individuals could commit themselves. History shows us that when we become success-dominated, we lose sight of our real reasons for living.

In its youth, America was ideal-dominated. Both individual citizens and the country as a whole had an impelling motive in life that was not limited to industrial, political, or economic growth. The men who gathered in 1787 could muster all their intellectual energies to formulate the national charter, overcome differences of background and interest — all because these men were laboring for a larger goal.

An equally vital role awaiting the American businessman today will be suggested at the end of this article. Time and again in American history the businessman has transcended his industrial role and become the buttress not only of government but of the public welfare. Today's crisis demands of him leadership in still another dimension — one where he has thus far conspicuously failed.

The boy in the ditch

A young executive rapidly moving up the financial ladder unequivocally stated in private conversation with me, "It is impossible to conduct business in the U.S. today without breaking the law."

If the statement is exaggerated, it nevertheless retains distressing validity for one like myself who was educated in New York City and has resided there over half a century. A considerable portion of my time has been spent with men engaged in a great variety of businesses, who keep an equal variety of balance sheets.

The most casual observer is aware of the transgressions that go on daily in the American business community. He hears of tax returns that are outright perjury; he hears of purchasing agents who are taking bribes from suppliers, of businessmen offering bribes for false testimony or for police protection of some dubious enterprise. He reads of industries attempting to suborn state legislators for favorable legislation. He reads of businessmen bestowing favors on government officials to win special privileges. Even in my ivory tower on Morningside Heights, I have been urged by businessmen to accept a gift for the Theological Seminary in return for admitting a student — and have been threatened by withdrawal of contributions to the school if I failed to do so.

We hear of businessmen using wire taps to obtain information about their competitors, of management acting in collusion with racketeers, of men using prostitution to promote the sale of their goods. We hear of businessmen violating the most elementary requirements of city building codes and profiting from rat-infested tenements. We hear of financiers deliberately lying about their operations and the financial condition of their companies to mislead investors so that insiders can make killings in stock.

There are less overt practices in the business community that may appear to be only on the borderline of unethical behavior; for example, concealing the true price of goods behind time-payment schemes that are actually usurious; employing advertising that is actually a flagrant misrepresentation of a product's worth. These and other clever dodges are accepted by many as normal phases of competition.

I would not deny that competition is the basis of our free enterprise and of our industrial success. Competition surely induces better efforts and greater production. But to compete in ways that are designed to destroy someone else is very different from competing in terms of doing better than your rival. Years ago in Lithuania, Rabbi Israel Salanter found two boys quarreling over which was the taller. One forced the other to stand in a ditch to settle the argument. Seeing this, Rabbi Israel sadly commented, "Isn't this characteristic of the world where to prove his superiority man must prove others inferior? After all, the same purpose could have been achieved by standing on a chair!"

When two companies are each trying to produce superior values, one may well be more successful than the other, and deservedly earn greater profits. But to seek a crippling advantage over another company is hardly fair competition and is certainly miserable ethics.

It seems to me that a management which is worthy of success is very different from a management which just wants success. One management conducts its affairs in the spirit of contribution, the other in the spirit of selfishness. Contributions to the general good have of course been made by men seeking only their own advantage, but selfishness cannot be made a principle of life and in our time might easily be fatal. Management worthy of success remembers that the true justification for profit is an incentive to serve the community. Success is paid to business by the community for the services it renders. In this sense, profits must clearly be an earned increment.

The practical value of ethics

This reasoning can certainly be understood if stated in terms of the individual. We understand the meaning and value to the individual of "a good reputation." Every businessman knows that his reputation for integrity is one of his major assets. Certainly, a man's progress in a corporation depends in large measure on the reputation he earns through his daily behavior. It is immensely difficult to falsify such a reputation over any extended period of time. We are soon known by those around us for who we are rather than what we would like others to think about us. This is a man's "character" in the profoundest sense of the word.

I was interested to hear a major executive point out that the criteria he uses for selecting employees run in this order: character, intelligence, experience. "A really bright executive picks up experience very quickly," he told me. "But the man we need and want most, in important places, is a man with character sufficient to resist many kinds of pressures when the going gets rough. We find, then, the character is the most important ingredient of all, particularly if the man is to be responsible for policy making. An executive can buy brains and can buy experience, but character is something he must supply himself."

And what is a man's character but his personal moral dimension, the goals he sets for himself, his sense of honesty and of responsibility, his relations with others? This does not mean, however, that the value of character derives from its contribution to success.

Unquestionably, ethics have a practical value, inseparable from their ultimate one: the creation of better men and women. Rivalry for goodness should, in the long run, make for pragmatic gain. But it is not enough for the individual or the corporation merely to mean well. Men as individuals and as corporations must make an effort to understand what they are doing, and why they are doing it.

The first step in the ethical life is self-criticism. As the Talmud puts it, "Cleanse yourselves, and then cleanse others." Ethics is a branch of thought starting with self-discipline. Discipline, whether among children or adults, whether self-imposed or external, is not popular in America today. And a welter of codes — in companies, in industries, in combines of industries, in labor — do not meet the situation.

Before anyone can think creatively about the moral life, he must feel in his bones a few principles that are part of any civilized ethic, without which civilization would be meaningless. I wish I could say with hope of being understood that of these the most important is awareness of God and love for Him. But as those words tend to become clichés, I
